Dive into the rich history of the Mogollon-Mimbres Culture with a presentation by Archeologist Dean Wilson

WHAT: The free presentation, titled "Some Ceramic Types from the Mogollon-Mimbres Country; Culture, Clay, Change, Connections and Classification," will delve into the distinct pottery types that mark the long occupation of the Mogollon Highlands.

WHO: Dean Wilson

WHEN: January 14, 2026,
at noon

WHERE: The New Mexico Office of Archaeological Studies, 7 Old Cochiti Rd. Santa Fe, NM

WHY: It's a unique opportunity to learn how culture, technology, and our natural environment worked together to shape the iconic pottery of the Mogollon-Mimbres people and appreciate the skill and resourcefulness of these ancient craftsmen.

HOW: Bring your brown bag lunch and settle in for a discussion of pottery from Southwestern New Mexico that sheds new light on the ingenuity and artistry of out ancient agricultural communities.

Characteristics of pottery of various native agriculture groups who lived in areas of the Mogollon Highlands in Southwestern New Mexico reflect influence from nearby "Ancestral Pueblo" groups and technology adapted to the distinct geography of this region.

Archaeologist Dean Wilson will focus on the changing sequence of Early Mogollon Decorated Ware, Mimbres White Ware, and Mogollon Brown Ware types for provinces in the Mogollon Highlands. The distinct characteristics noted for pottery assigned to these wares, while often characterized as reflecting a distinct cultural tradition, also seem to be the result of a long-lived technology adapted to the distinct temper, paste clay and slip resources associated with the volcanic fields and alluvial deposits that cover this region. The distinct nature of pottery produced in these regions result from the use of ubiquitous high iron, soft low firing, porous and extremely moldable clay sources. The use of such resources resulted in very distinct pottery forms as compared to that associated with well-known pottery long produced by Ancestral Pueblo groups in the Colorado Plateau.

Bring your brown bag lunch and enjoy the unique opportunity to learn how culture, technology, and our natural environment worked together to shape the iconic pottery of the Mogollon-Mimbres people and appreciate the skill and resourcefulness of these ancient craftsmen. The free brown bag lunch and discussion take place at The New Mexico Office of Archaeological Studies, 7 Old Cochiti Rd. Santa Fe, NM at noon on Wednesday, January 14, 2026.

Mesilla Valley Balloon Rally...

*If attending, do plan to bring your own seating. On-leash pets are allowed at the event.

* NOTE: Keep in mind that this sport is dependent on good weather. Safety is of the utmost importance with weather as a major factor when making the determination of when to fly. If the weather is too windy (more than 10 mph) or if there are storms within 50 miles, most pilots will not risk flying. The pilots have the final say-so of when to fly.
